Hi Austin

This is Joe from The Flooring Center.

I recalled you are overseas so assuming text is better for you.

I heard the installers returned last week to address the issues. Assuming all is well.

Should we run the balance on the same card? If so, we just need the CV code please.

Thanks much,
Joe

Hi Joe, have you talked to anyone about the differences in the floor finish from the sample board?

Yes. They shot me down on it, saying variations can occur at the factory level, but reiterated that they fully warranty the product from any defects or performance issues. I am confident since many of the very aggressive wire brushed floors hold up very well. Hoping that is ok?

Also, if it's ok for us to run the balance, we just need the CV code on your card please.

Hoping to close it out today as the month is ending.

When the installers came out to look at the installation issues in the master bedroom they removed a plank or two, showed me that the subfloor was flexing and said they weren't hitting a truss when they tried to add additional nails to the subfloor. They installed new planks where they removed the old ones and put a bunch of countersunk screws in the floor where the planks were shifting, wobbling and flexing. When they glued the new planks they put a box of planks on it to hold it down. I haven't removed the box or walked on the floor since they left and I don't know how the repair settled. This seems like more of a band-aid than a fix. If there was a structural problem with the subfloor it should have been brought to my attention before the floor was installed. I'm out of the country until at least October so I cannot check whether the repair is holding up.

I have another concern about the initial installation. The installers brought the floor material to my house in a trailer on the first day of installation. They only brought the boxes inside as they were being used. Most of the floor was installed on the second day after having been left in the trailer in my driveway overnight. I'm interested to know if they took the proper temperature and relative humidity readings outlined by the NWFA and required for the floor manufacturer's warranty prior to installation.

I'm still disappointed with the finish of the floor. The finish of the manufacturer sample board does not match the installed floor. The sample board has a lighter wire brushing and uniform grain coloring. The installed floor has heavy wire brushing and a splotchy lighter grain coloring. The details on the back of the board clearly state "lightly wirebrushed". It is my opinion that the manufacturer either mis-manufactured the product or misrepresented the product. I'd like a manufacturer's rep to see the floor.

A little more feedback on the installation company. On the third day of installation while I was downstairs working in the kitchen, I overheard the owner and one of the other guy's talking upstairs in the master bedroom. The other guy made a comment about the floor flexing in the master bedroom as they were cleaning up and the owner told him not to worry about it, it's a bedroom, they'll put a bed over it. Then the installers all walked downstairs and out the back door and said they were done and leaving. I hope you can understand why I have concerns that all the proper preparation and installation steps were followed.

Thanks. I will involve our operations manager fully and we will come up with a plan of action.

If you can provide me with your email address I will forward some information to you. We involved the manufacturer rep and they are asking for pictures and other things. Given you are out of country, we need to find a way to access the space and inspect.
